

Browser Testing Notes

I tested my website in Chrome, Safari, and Firefox. Overall, each browser rendered the site with slight differences, but the main functionality remained intact.

In Chrome, the hero images appeared taller, and some sections of the layout looked compressed. A few elements didn't display correctly, and parts of the contact page were cut off. While mostly okay and functional, the overall appearance felt a bit off compared to other browsers.

In Safari, the site displayed as intended with ample spacing and balanced layout. Fonts, colors, and images all rendered cleanly, and the contact page looked great. This was the most visually ideal version across the three.

In Firefox, the layout had slightly less spacing overall, giving it a more compact appearance. Elements rendered slightly taller than in Safari but remained readable and well-structured. Despite the tighter layout, everything displayed correctly and worked without issue.
